WASHINGTON, DC – Bracewell LLP announced today that Andrew Shaw has joined the firm's Washington, DC office as a partner in Bracewell's Policy Resolution Group (PRG). Shaw is a highly respected attorney and government affairs professional in the energy and environmental sectors.

"Andrew is an outstanding advocate for his clients on a wide variety of energy transition issues and policies," said Bracewell Managing Partner Gregory M. Bopp. "He brings valuable experience lobbying Congress and various federal agencies, and we are excited to have him join our award-winning Policy Resolution Group in Washington, DC."

Known for his extensive expertise and deep connections with policymakers and other stakeholders, Shaw represents organizations before Congress, federal agencies, associations and NGOs, on environmental issues, climate policy, renewable energy, nuclear energy, grid modernization and electricity regulation.

Shaw joins Bracewell from Dentons, where he was a member of its public policy department in the firm's Washington, DC office.

"Energy and climate policies are changing rapidly. Andrew's expertise in public policy related to energy and the environment aligns seamlessly with our government relations and strategic communications practices," said E. Dee Martin, who co-chairs Bracewell's Policy Resolution Group along with Scott H. Segal.

"Andrew's focus on renewable energy and climate policy is a strong addition to PRG as we help our clients manage the challenges of the energy transition," added Segal.
