

Juror Revelations May Jeopardize Ghislaine Maxwell Convictions, Experts Say

Media Mentions

January 06, 2022 | The Washington Post | 1 minute read | New York

---

Bracewell's Seth DuCharme shared with The Washington Post how a new trial for Ghislaine Maxwell on sex-trafficking and conspiracy would be rare, even after two jurors publicly disclosed past sexual abuse that they might not have included on pretrial questionnaires.

Outside of egregious examples, "there's a certain acceptance that jurors bring personal experience into deliberations," DuCharme said.

Juries are generally not attorneys and judges, so conversations in jury rooms are "amongst people that come from the community," he added. "If you were going to disturb every jury verdict because somebody brought their own personal experience into that process, then you would have to disturb every jury verdict."

Click here to read more from *The Washington Post*.

Related People

Seth D. DuCharme

Partner

NEW YORK

+1.212.508.6165

seth.ducharme@bracewell.com

Related Practices

Government Enforcement &

Investigations

Litigation