

US Energy, Climate Law Expected to Survive Across Multiple Election Scenarios

Media Mentions

September 26, 2024 | S&P Global | 1 minute read | Washington, DC

Bracewell's Policy Resolution Group senior political strategist Liam Donovan told S&P Global that he does not see a full repeal of the Inflation Reduction Act if Donald Trump returns to the White House with slim majorities in the House and Senate.

"It won't be day one root-and-branch repeal," Donovan said. "It's just not something that's going to happen."

Meanwhile, Donovan sees a Kamala Harris administration with slight Democratic majorities likely focusing its energies elsewhere than the IRA.

"They're going to have to deal with those same looming non-energy related fiscal items that I think are going to dominate the bandwidth that they have," added Donovan.

Related People

Liam P. Donovan
Senior Political Strategist
WASHINGTON, DC
+1.202.828.5847
liam.donovan@bracewell.com

Related Industries

Energy

Finance

Related Practices

Government Relations

Strategic Communications