About Keith

Recognized by his peers for his ability to understand, communicate and litigate complex financial matters, Keith Blackman has successfully defended some of the nation's largest multinational institutions in commercial disputes over his 20-year career. Keith not only performs the role of zealous advocate prepared to litigate any case to trial and beyond, but he is also a trusted counselor who understands that scorched-earth litigation often is not the most profitable solution.

Keith frequently defends financial services institutions and other commercial clients in cases alleging fraud, racketeering, breach of fiduciary duty, breach of contract and securities law violations. Regularly appearing in trial and appellate courts throughout the country, Keith is also a frequent advocate before Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) arbitration panels.

Apart from his financial services litigation practice, Keith advises clients on cryptocurrency and blockchain issues, as well as environmental, social and governance (ESG) litigation. Prior to joining Bracewell, Keith also had substantial experience litigating tax disputes, intellectual property disputes and white-collar cases.

Keith is a graduate of Harvard Law School and received his B.A. in Economics from the University of Pennsylvania.
