About Joshua

Joshua focuses on Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) regulation and compliance for renewable power companies and natural gas and oil pipelines. He also has experience with Constitutional considerations that overlap with energy law and rule-making before administrative agencies, as well as the environmental considerations involved in the production and transmission of power.

Prior to joining Bracewell Josh worked as a legal intern for the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and as a legal fellow for the American Wind Association. Before law school, Josh worked for a renewable energy certificate (REC) broker in Stamford, Connecticut and gained a familiarity with state Renewable Portfolio Standards, electricity market structure, and renewable energy finance.
